"Over the years, members and chapter heads have requested and proposed the implementation of a gender, sexual, and racial diversity policy to ensure equity within TST leadership and alignment to the mission. The demand was not simply ignored but completely dismissed. The demand was not hollow; there was a clear and pressing need for this policy. While I was part of the organization, I witnessed male members of the organization exploit their position and influence to behave inappropriately and disrespectfully towards women."

For all who like and follow The Satanic Temple Los Angeles have come to our events, thank you for all of your support:

The Los Angeles chapter of The Satanic Temple is hereby withdrawing from The Satanic Temple. All active members have agreed to this decision. This decision was reached after months of deliberation in the wake of The Satanic Temple Executive Ministry's decision to pursue a religious discrimination claim against Twitter for temporarily banning Lucien Greaves from their platform and for denying Lucien Greaves blue check verification. Our disappointment with the unilateral decision by Executive Ministries to expend resources pursuing this claim is only compounded by their choice to retain the law firm of

"It has been almost two years since our schism with TST, yet it was as the tumbling of small stones which precipitates a landslide. Recently a series of dominoes has fallen because of the unchecked hubris of TST's National Council and Doug Messner. The UK Chapter announced its separation from TST merely a week ago now. They were closely followed by the LA Chapter, then Portland Chapter; both of which held deep contempt for Doug's position on white supremacists and the newest wave of neo-Nazism to grip our nation. We have been told by TST insiders with whom we have remained friendly, that these will not be the last to depart... that others have had similar experiences to our own. Their dissatisfaction with the National Council's treatment of their proposals and the unique situations they deal with in their various regions has lead to the realization that the Temple serves mostly as a vehicle for Doug's personal vendettas. Most notable is his longstanding feud with Jason Rapert; a rabid theist in the Arkansas Legislature."

The Satanic Temple managed to clatter into the story. A widely shared Slate.com article declared confidently, and wrongly, that Missouri's flash-renaissance of abortion access was "thanks to Planned Parenthood and Satanists." (Breitbart carried the error into the realm of fantasy, suggesting Planned Parenthood was "teaming up" with the worshipers of the child-sacrifice-demanding Moloch.)

In reality, the Temple's lawsuits were irrelevant, though the Satanists did their best to spin to the contrary.

"It should be noted that TST has done good and legitimate work on these fronts in the past, and credit should be given where it is due. But the unfortunate reality is that, from the top-down, TST is a crypto-fascist organization with some members being outright neo-nazis. Of course, it must be mentioned that TST has some members who aren't neo-nazis or neo-fascists and some are even antifascist; that said, we encourage those who are antifascists within TST to take a hard look at the reality of the organization they're involved with and consider exiting the group."

In addition to being a Holocaust denier and white supremacist slated to be a headline speaker at the "Unite the Right Rally" in Charlottesville, Augustus Invictus' wife says he's also a spousal abuser.

"Last month, a woman who said she was Invictus' wife reported that he held her at gunpoint in front of their children and forced her to accompany him to Jacksonville, Florida, according to documents obtained from the Rock Hill Police Department in South Carolina. She told police that she was able to escape while in Florida and return to South Carolina."

I regret to announce that I have withdrawn from my role as a scheduled speaker at the forthcoming Left Hand Path Consortium to take place in Atlanta early next month. When it was announced that I was to speak at the Consortium, I received a few emails from concerned observers who asked why I would appear at an event alongside a "fascistic" character like Augustus Sol Invictus, who was also scheduled to speak. While I'm not intimately familiar with the works and philosophy of the man in question, I also did not feel that my speaking at the conference constituted an endorsement of his, or anybody else's, point of view. Further, his perspective, from what I know, legitimately falls somewhere on a broad spectrum of recognized "Left Hand Path" philosophies, whether I find that perspective tenable, consistent, and reasonable, or not (just as Fascism legitimately has a place in discussions upon political philosophies without fear that such a discussion lends undue credibility to its contemporary implementation. Do we truly know what we're for if we refuse to discuss what we're against?). From what I know, he's part of a larger dialogue regarding the Left Hand Path that I feel is worth engaging in.

I am not withdrawing from speaking because Invictus was invited to speak, but rather because he was recently dis-invited. Protesters have harangued the organizers, and the organizers have expressed concerns for the security of their attendees were Invictus to remain on the speaker's list. I have no reason to doubt the sincerity of the organizers, however, I feel that the dis-invitation sends a harmful message in support of censorship.

I, too, find some of my speaking events besieged by (religious) protesters, and I hope that civil protest can take place without silencing my voice, or anybody else's.

One might rightly ask if there were any situation in which I might consider not speaking at a conference due to another speaker's point-of-view. Of course, If I were going to a Science conference and there was scheduled a Creationist lecturer, I would likely find the conference hardly worth attending, much less speaking at. This is because Creationism isn't taken seriously by around 100% of credible scientists. If, however, Creationism were, against all reason, taken seriously by some 30% or more of scientists, and the conference were going to contain lectures by Evolutionary Biologists who were to offer a rational view, I would think it the duty of those Evolutionary Biologists to attend, share their knowledge, and confront the poor science with hard empiricism.

I do not think that Invictus's views are in such a disappearingly small minority as to imagine that confronting his opinions give them unwarranted exposure. I think his views are prevalent enough within Left Hand Path communities that it is worth our time to argue them and delineate how and where we differ in the Satanic Reformation of The Satanic Temple.

It's easy to stand up for Free Speech when you are fighting for your own voice, or for the voice of those you agree with. It's a completely different fight and, arguably, your loyalty to Free Speech only means anything at all, when you're willing to fight for the Free Speech of those with whom you disagree.

I'm sorry to those for whom my bowing out will cause any type of inconvenience. Thank you.

For the record, yes, LG Doug did illustrate a copy of the proto-fascist book "Might Is Right", later cited by the Gilroy Garlic Fest shooter as inspiration (<https://www.stuff.co.nz/.../white-supremacists-satanists-and-...>).

So he wasn't just dabbling in a bit of drunken "Aryan King" Jew-hatred, and no, it's still something LG Doug has never been able to actually speak honestly about, which is why the decision to defend Neo-Nazis and utilize their lawyers in the name of "free speech" rings a bit hollow.

(The deeply antisemitic, racist, and misogynistic book "Might Is Right" by Ragnar Redbeard / Arthur Desmon was also the basis for many parts of Anton LaVey's book "The Satanic Bible, so modern Satanism comes by it at least two-fold.)

From the official media training guide:

[Don't answer] Yes or no questions.

Question:

"This is a simple yes or no: "Didn't Lucien illustrate a copy of Might is Right. Isn't that a white supremacist book?"

Here's why they're so insidious: They almost always have an obvious answer, and everyone watching the interview knows it. But if you answer with a direct "yes or no," the resulting quote will be awful.

Never say "Yes" or "No" to a question like this. It is always a way to trap yourself.

Let's say you answer the question by saying, "Yes" in any way The resulting news story will almost certainly read, "When asked whether Lucien Greaves illustrated a White Suprememcist book, the TST spokesperson said 'yes.'"

You don't have to answer on their terms. Instead, say something like: "I can't speak to something that happened almost 20 years ago.

What we do know is that TST is incredibly inclusive and we welcome members from all walks of life."

Finally (I think), here's some background on the 2018 departure of many chapters who decided that TST was what it was and never would change, given all of its structure and history.

So, what have we learned?

No matter how much you think your own chapter is different and disconnected from what happens in Salem, it isn't. If you go against the company line, you'll be thwarted, expelled, undermined, or your chapter as a whole will have to leave.

We've learned that authoritarian management structures of volunteers isn't actually a very effective one, especially if you don't remember that eventually, like, within a week, you should remove them from all of the permissions they had to help build and grow the organization. Or even bother to talk to any of them. That this is something that will help membership just shut up and trust your leadership and competence in the future.

We've learned, I hope, that rather than trying to get everyone to sign NDAs and sign away the rights to their photos, you ought to try to treat people decently and, you know, like people. "One should strive to act with compassion and empathy toward all creatures in accordance with reason."

And maybe we've even learned that organizations aren't separable from the people in them. If you have an org and you think it's worth sacrificing respect for the people who are in it or have been in it for some higher cause.

There are still plenty of great people in TST. Good work still is done. And it's never too late to build something new. But, many people before you have tried, and it always seems to come to this if you go too far saying "fascists are bad" or "trans people are people" or even "we need to have a meeting space that's accessible, even if no wheelchair users are members yet."

So be prepared for that.

Ave Satanas, wash your hands, and take care of each other. Good night.
